Organisational Resilience - What Would Indiana Jones Do?

Tuesday 28th February 2017

5:30 pm for 5:45 pm – 6:45 pm

Transport Accident Commission, 60 Brougham St, Geelong

Topic

In a year of growing uncertainty across the globe it is more important than ever to invest in enhancing resilience within your Organisation.

Just like Indiana Jones, who continually gets knocked down, beat up and chased by huge rolling boulders but always seems to bounce back, adapt quickly and survive, your organisation needs to enhance these qualities.

Organisational Resilience is defined as an organisation's ability to absorb or adapt to a changing environment. This presentation will provide an insight into:

- What is Organisational Resilience
- An overview of the new ISO Standard ISO: 22316 Security and Resilience: Organisational Resilience Principles and Attributes;
- The difference between Resilience Strategy and Resilience disciplines;
- Where the role of Organisational Resilience fits within your Organisation;
- The TAC's Organisational Resilience Model; and
- Indiana Jones' own thoughts on building resilience.

Presenter

The presenter, Pete Gervosoni, has worked in risk related roles for more than 10 years and currently specialises in Organisational Resilience. Pete has held management positions in multiple levels of Government across diverse sectors including Enterprise Risk Management, project management, policy development, quality assurance, international bilateral negotiation and innovation.

Currently working at the Transport Accident Commission (TAC) as a Senior Risk Partner, he provides an internal risk management consultancy to the Executive and Senior managers together with developing the TAC Organisational Resilience Framework.

Pete was formally the Deputy Director for International Arrangements & Services at the Defence Materiel Organisation providing Government Quality Assurance services and advice including risk management to Defence projects and operational elements, including International Partners & Industry.

Pete is an active member of the RMIA Organisational Resilience Special Interest Group and was recently appointed to the Standards Australian/ISO working group (MB025/TC292) on Security and Resilience.

Pete is continually looking at innovative approaches to integrating Resilience into Organisations.
